Costa Rica

Costa Rica is a small, democratic and peaceful country located at the exact center of the Americas, between Nicaragua and Panama. It is slightly smaller than the state of West Virginia and has a population of three million.

In recent years, Costa Rica has made the preservation of its natural heritage a top priority. More than 23 percent of its mountains, valleys and shoreline is protected in national parks, forestry reserves and wildlife refuges. Its twelve distinct ecological systems contain more than 8,000 species of plants, including 1,500 varieties of orchids, more types of birds than in all of North America, and more butterfly species than the entire continent of Africa.

Unlike most other countries in the world, Costa Rica has no army, choosing instead to spend its tax dollars on education and health care for its citizens.

Our California Native trips explore the country from its Pacific to its Caribbean coasts and introduce the visitor to the rich contrasts and natural diversity of this unique land. Please join us on one of our Costa Rican Adventures. I know you'll have a wonderful time.

Questions We Are Frequently Asked About Costa Rica:

What is the weather like?

There are only two seasons in Costa Rica, the rainy season (or “Green Season”) and the dry season. The rainy season starts in May and finishes in November. During this season there is usually rain in the late afternoon. Unlike rain in more northern latitudes, this is warm water and not uncomfortable. Many people prefer to travel during this season in tropical countries as there are less tourists, the colors are more vivid, and the rivers and waterfalls are at their fullest. The majority of visitors come to Costa Rica during the dry season, and Christmas is the most popular time of the year. Since this season is the middle of winter in North America, people like to travel to Costa Rica to “thaw out”.

The average temperature in Costa Rica is approximately 73° F and varies little with the season. Average rainfall on the Caribbean coast is around 120 inches a year, while the Pacific coast averages 75 inches a year.

Do I need a passport or visa?

If you are a U.S. citizen you only need a valid passport. Citizens of other countries should check with the Costa Rican consulate regarding visas.

Do I need shots?

No shots or inoculations are needed for Costa Rica.

What part of Costa Rica is best to visit?

Costa Rica has much to offer. There are rainforests, beaches, volcanoes, mountains and more. If this is your first trip to Costa Rica, you probably want to get a sampling of each of the environments the country has to offer. The best way to do this is by joining one of our Nature Explorer adventures.

Discovering The “Rich Coast”

ON SEPTEMBER 8, 1502, ON HIS FOURTH VOYAGE TO THE NEW World, Christopher Columbus landed on the Atlantic Coast of Costa Rica, close to what is now the port of Limon. The Spaniards were greeted by friendly Indians. Columbus was so impressed by the golden mirrors they wore around their necks and their stories of gold mines along the coast to the south that he named the land Costa Rica, the “Rich Coast.” The “Rich Coast” turned out to be one of Spain’s poorest American colonies, with impenetrable forests, impassable mountains, raging rivers and a lack of natural resources. The gold mines of the Indians, if they ever really existed, were never discovered. In addition, the Spanish colonists found that they could not force the Indians into slavery, so the Spaniards themselves were forced to eke out a living with their own labor in a hostile land. This inability to delegate work to a subservient indigenous population led to a democratic, do-it-yourself tradition, which became a part of the national character.

Despite the lack of gold, Costa Rica is indeed a rich land. It is rich in the diversity of its animal and plant life, its mountains, rivers, swamps and grasslands, and in its traditions of democracy and individual freedom.
